Does anyone know if there is a vim way to do this? A: Insert Mode is generally your friend. :i for insert mode, and " for visual mode. ggVG is generally your friend ggVgg is generally your friend "a(ggVG) to visually select everything in the line to the end of the file ggVG0ggVG is generally your friend For Insert and Visual mode, you can use "\r" or "\b" to position the cursor in the file, and that can be followed by "g" to "get" or "v" to "put" the text. A: It is a lot easier and more universal to use visual mode to move around your file. The dot command can be used to move to the start of a function. In the following steps, I will use the word function for convenience. From any position in the file, enter visual mode with "o A visual block will be selected that runs from the cursor position all the way to the end of the file. Visual mode exits when you leave the visual block.
