Vector field analysis for convective-plume interaction in the vertical convection zone. We study the interaction between Rayleigh plumes, as commonly observed near the top of the convection zone of the Sun and exoplanets, and deep-seated secondary vortices. Using a variational principle, we show that the interaction of the plumes is dominated by the upper branch of the perturbation spectrum. No density or enthalpy perturbations are generated. The oscillatory interaction between the plumes and the vortices leads to a transfer of energy from the plumes to the vortices, suggesting that convective-plume interaction can play a role in transporting the latent heat of the solar convection zone to the surface.

Furcation repair using a novel collagen membrane containing natural growth factors. Furcation lesions pose a challenge for endodontists because of the many ways that they can complicate root canal therapy. The aim of this study was to report a prospective, long-term clinical outcome evaluation of a novel collagen membrane with topical application of a growth factor combination. Eight patients with a total of 12 furcation defects were treated using a collagen membrane, with or without use of a growth factor combination. After 6 months, clinical and radiographic assessments were performed to evaluate the efficacy of treatment. After 6 months, complete closure of 3 furcations was observed, with 4 furcations remaining closed (75%). None of the furcations treated with the collagen membrane alone showed complete closure at 6 months. Radiographic

Gereg Prusin Gereg Prusin (; sometimes romanized as Gereg Prusin or Gervais Prusin) was a duke of Ruthenia in the 10th and 11th centuries. His name and family origin are unknown. Duke of Mecklenburg In 990, he was a grandson of the late duke Gereg II, son of Sviatoslav I of Kiev and a sister of Vladimir II of Kiev. Prusin was the son-in-law of Mecklenburg's duke Gebhard, who ruled from about 984 to 994. From at least 998, he was the duke of the entire Principality of Mecklenburg, a settlement on the Elbe estuary on the northern bank of the estuary's mouth, north of the modern city of Stralsund and west of the delta of the Oder. In 1004, Mecklenburg's Margraviate of Lusatia, which lay on the eastern bank of the Elbe and extended west to the Oder, was riven in two, and Prusin's nephew Margrave Odo became Margrave of Lusatia. This was still the case after Gebhard's death in 1004. According to Russian chroniclers, Prusin was the brother of Sviatoslav's brother Sviatoslav III, suggesting that Prusin himself was his nephew, and Sviatoslav III was a son of Gereg II, rather than a grandson of Gereg II's son Sviatoslav I. In 1007, Prusin married Judith of Poland, daughter of the late Duke Bolesław I of Poland and widow of another brother of Sviatoslav III, Jarosław I, Duke of Poland. They had six children: Ekbert III (1009–1041) Eustace (1009–1041) Judith (1019–1116) Liutgard (1020–1065), married in 1050 to Duke Swietopelk II of Brzeg and Riesenburg Ewald II (1021–1105) Helwig (before 1027–1055), married to Princess Maria, daughter of the Polish Prince Bolko I of Poland Duke of Neuburg After the death of Gebhard around 100
